

Comments from your Chief Investment Officer

Once again, we are in the midst of the quarterly reporting cycle. So far half of your portfolio's constituents have reported results for Q3 2021. The numbers remain strong with weighted average revenue growth at 23%, operating margins healthy at 34% and net income up 37% year-on-year. Multiple constituents across your portfolio, from the global paint industry to consumer electronics, have stated growth could have been even more robust, were it not for tightness in global supply chains. Although uncertainty remains, these bottlenecks are generally expected to be cleared in the new year, suggesting there is still a reserve of pent-up demand to support economic activity for some time to come. That said, year-on-year growth numbers are being flattered by base effects from last year's lockdown and some moderation toward more sustainable growth levels should be expected in the new year.

This month, Nvidia has again been the star of your portfolio gaining 23% in its market capitalisation. Hermes, Cadence Design and Microsoft were all vying for second place with percentage gains in the mid-teens. The largest fly in the ointment was PayPal which fell by approximately 12% on the month.

As we look into the new year, we remain optimistic on the prospects for global growth. The combination of rapid technological innovation supported by increasingly activist government policies, should support economic change for the foreseeable future. As we write, an estimated 30,000 attendees, supported by 400 private jets, are in Glasgow discussing how they can lower our carbon footprint. Similarly, the G7 is planning another revolution in our monetary system; see the G7's policy principles for Retail Central Bank Digital Currencies. While the longer term benefits of these changes remain uncertain their shorter term GDP boosting impact looks more clear.
